MOTION PICTURE NOTES

Rita Jolivet, Hamilton Revelle and Patsy Montana, a chimpanzee, have the leading roles in "The Masque of Life," which opens at the Park Monday.

John Gough, a Mutual actor, begs to inform the public that his name rhymes with "cough," not "dough." That's strange. "Dough" seems more attractive.

Art Acord, hero of the "Buck Parrot" film series, has been engaged by William Fox. Art will star in Western pictures.

Walter Wright and a Bennett-Keystone company are in Pasadena making a picture at the quarters of the Sells-Floto circus. It's full of wild animals.

Little Jane Lee, who was bitten recently by Theda Bara's Russian wolfhound, has recovered. Jane says the dog bit her because he thought she was a frankfurter.

Having heard that Charlie Chaplin's funny feet are not versed in ice skating, Maria Johansson of St. Nicholas Rink has offered to teach him to skate. She'd like to see a Chaplin ice comedy, she says.

Rosalind Ivan and Thomas J. Kelly have sold the motion picture rights to their story, "Beauty," to William A. Brady for a World film production.

Earl Fox has joined the Metro acting forces and is supporting Olga Petrova in her latest Popular Plays and Players production.

At the Burial Theatre, Bronx, where "The Birth of a Nation" is being shown this week, babies are not admitted. The mothers check their little ones in an ante-room, where they spend the afternoon whooping it up.

Ann Pennington is going to the Strand Sunday evening to see the former "Follies" dancer, Ann Pennington, act out in a film called "The Rainbow Princess."
